PREFACE

STRANGE it is indeed what great things come from small beginnings. Though it would be impossible to trace any trade succession, few people who in the present century handle the bulky volumes of 'Burke' and 'Debrett' would imagine that they are but the development of the tiny forerunner which is reproduced in the accompanying facsimile of 'An Exact List of the Lords.' This is believed to be the first annual or regularly periodical publication. There had been other books which, in one form and another, had dealt with the Peerage, its titles and its arms; but writings and publications of this character, of which the list in Guillim may be instanced, were more of the character of the scholarly 'Complete Peerage' by 'G. E. C.' which has recently been completed, than of the nature of a publication intended for handy reference.

Collins's 'Peerage' had of course appeared earlier, in 1713, with a second edition in the following year, and it continued to appear at uncertain and irregular intervals. Undoubtedly Collins partook more of the nature of a Peerage as we now understand such a book than the accompanying volume.

Of arms, dates of creation, and lineage it will be seen that this earliest Peerage takes no cognizance, and as a matter of fact it is really not so much a Peerage Book as a Parliamentary Directory.

It contains an exact list of the House of Peers in order of precedence, save that the Archbishops and Bishops are all grouped together at the end. With these latter certain biographical details are given, though these details are confined to the dates of consecration and translation. This is followed by an exact list of the House of Commons, arranged first with the constituencies in alphabetical order, and secondly with the names in alphabetical order. Members in the previous Parliament who were not in the House in 1734, with the list of the trustees and commissioners appointed for settling the Colony of Georgia, complete the book. In each case the address in London is given, and the fact that the seats of Peers in the provinces are all omitted clearly indicates that the volume was intended for the purposes of a Parliamentary Directory. Of the then dukedoms, thirty-one in number, the majority are still in existence. After the Prince of Wales as Duke of Cornwall, a dukedom which has lately been again brought into much prominence, the list is headed by 'Butcher' Cumberland, of evil and Culloden notoriety. This dukedom of Cumberland is an earlier creation than that borne in more recent times by the Kings of Hanover. Then come Norfolk, Somerset, Cleveland, Richmond, Grafton, Beaufort, and St. Albans, all owing their ducal titles to royal descent or relationship. Of these, Cleveland is now extinct, the death of the last Duchess of a subsequent creation a few months ago removing the name finally from the Peerage books. A division is made in each rank of the Peerage for those created 'since the Revolution,' and of the Dukes who are so described the titles of Bolton, Buckinghamshire, Montague, Dover, Kent, Ancaster, Kingston, Greenwich, Chandos, Dorset, and Bridgwater are all extinct. One scarcely realizes, until the figures are put side by side, how short is the average life of a title and how constantly the Peerage is changing. Thirteen out of thirty-one is a large proportion, particularly when it is realized also that with the extinction of the dukedoms of Cleveland, Buckinghamshire, Kent, and Chandos the families themselves in the male line, no less than the Peerages, have become extinct.

It is interesting to notice that in the names and titles the little shib-boleth affectations of spelling which are accepted at the present day were missing two hundred years ago. The Seymours were then content to so spell their name, the saintly 'St. Maur' being of more modern adoption. The FitzRoys were then content without the capital 'R' in the middle of their name, as to which they are now so particular. Lennox was shorn of the middle 'n,' and Beauclerk was then Beauclair. Montagu was then Mountague, and the Pierrepont family were then content with Pierpoint. The Duke of Portland spelt his name Bentink, and Lord Denbigh's ancestor placed the 'i' before the 'e.' This would rather seem to discount the celebrated anecdote which is fathered upon the novelist of his lordship's family name.

Some of the London addresses sound strange to us at the present time, although, on the other hand, many neighbourhoods (for example, St. James's Place, St. James's Square, and Arlington Street) were then fashionable quarters. It is curious to think of the Duke of Cleveland living in Soho Square, but the residence of the Duke of Montague in the 'Cockpit' was rather more aristocratic than it sounds. The Earl of Abingdon lived in Dirty Lane, wherever that neighbourhood may have been, and the residence of Earl Rivers 'at Liege' needs no further explanation. Lord Macclesfield lived in Thrift Street, Soho; but Lord Arundel has only 'Petty France' given as his address. The Earl of Orrery was 'abroad,' and the Earl of Kinnoul 'in Turkey.'

In looking over the list of the House of Commons, one is struck by the recurrence of names which are still known to us in connection with the House ; but probably the greatest interest will be found in the markings which are explained in a note preceding the list of the House of Commons. From this we learn which of the members voted for and against the Excise Bill and the Septennial Act. These afford us a good insight into the political views of the members, inasmuch as both were pronouncedly 'party measures,' the Whigs favouring each measure. The Septennial Act passed in 1716, which extended the duration of Parliaments from three years to seven, was of course due to the disturbed state of the country after the rebellion of 1715. The Excise

Act of 1733 was one of the most noteworthy measures of Walpole's tenure of the office of Prime Minister. Originally intended to prevent smuggling by collecting certain taxes within the country as 'Excise,' instead of at the entrance of the commodities into the country as 'Customs,' the Act was really a startling bid towards that Free Trade policy which everyone has been brought up to believe in as the foundation of England's prosperity. Sir Robert Walpole, in advocating the Bill, said 'London would become a free port, and, in consequence, the market of the world.' This Excise Bill aroused the greatest opposition, not only from the Tory party, but also from the country generally, and consequently Walpole, though he had a Whig majority in Parliament, withdrew it.

The opinions of the members of the House of Lords are given us concerning the inquiry into the affairs of the South Sea Company, and Peers are also marked as 'Protesters against the Hessians' at various dates.

In 1734 there appear to have been 31 Dukes, 2 Marquesses, 84 Earls, 16 Viscounts, and 65 Barons, and 26 Archbishops and Bishops—in all 224, exclusive of the Irish Peerage, none of the members of which figure in the tiny volume. The following figures at the beginning of the present year may be useful for comparison: Archbishops, 2; Dukes, 22; Marquesses, 22; Earls, 121; Viscounts, 30; Bishops, 24; Barons, 319. Scottish Peers (of whom sixteen are representative, though many sit under Peerages of Great Britain or the United Kingdom) : Dukes, 8 ; Marquesses, 4 ; Earls, 44 ; Viscounts, 5 ; Barons, 25. Peeresses and Irish Peers are not included in either calculation.

This little facsimile of the first annual Peerage published in England will, it is believed, prove of interest to genealogists as furnishing a faithful presentation of the form in which our forefathers referred to the 'Burke' and 'Debrett' of their day. It will be valuable also as recording the lists of Lords Temporal and Spiritual living in the year 1734, and as showing the principles and classification and grouping of politicians at that period. The facsimile is produced by a photographic process from the only copy extant, which is in the British Museum, and was found bound up in a volume containing Goldsmith's

Almanac for 1735.
